

Have you been the victim of a road traffic accident while driving on business?

Most firms consider driving at work a low risk activity, but the stark facts are that around 1,000 employees are killed while driving during working hours in the UK every year - that's four times the number killed in workplace accidents.

All employers have a duty to protect their staff from harm while driving, as they would in any other workplace.

Under Health and Safety regulations employers must take simple steps to ensure the wellbeing of their staff, including:

- ✓ Safe driving policies
- ✓ Licence and insurance checks
- ✓ Journey planning
- ✓ Maximum driving hours
- ✓ Ensuring vehicles are roadworthy

Any employers that fail to protect their staff while driving on business could be sued for compensation or face criminal charges.

If you've been involved in an RTA while driving at work and feel your employer could be to blame simply Freephone Geoffrey Leaver on 0333 200 4334 to find out whether you could make a claim.
